ORLANDO -- Bruce and Ellen Gardner, proprietors of Funtime Bowl in Atlanta, GA., spent two full days walking the aisles at the Orlando Convention Center, during International BOWL EXPO, bowling's premier trade show.

"Bruce wouldn't miss BOWL EXPO," Ellen explains. "We have to keep up with all of the new electronic and technical advances."

The Gardners have operated the 24-lane bowling center for four years. Prior to that, they ran a 12-lane center in Tennessee.

Bruce started with bowling as a youngster, serving as a pinchaser.

"When we met," says Ellen, "he introduced me to his first love and I fell in love with the sport myself."

In addition to working in the center, Ellen also serves on the Board of Directors of the Greater Atlanta United States Bowling Congress. (USBC).

"I attended the lane certification seminar here and it really was enlightening," says Ellen.

Ellen's father, John, who was also in attendance, is a recent Southeast bowling hall of fame inductee.

The Bowling Proprietors' Association of America is the driving force behind Bowl Expo. The association represents the majority of bowling centers in the nation.
